NAZA Youth Level Outcomes Framework Research Grant Nashville Public Library

Nashville Public Library Foundation Abstract

The Nashville Public Library Foundation is the lead applicant on behalf of the Nashville Public Library's Nashville After Zone Alliance (NAZA). Key collaborators include Vanderbilt University's Peabody College, Every Hour Counts, Boston After School and Beyond, as well as many Nashville community stakeholders. Children and youth aged 6-18 only spend 20 percent of their waking hours in school.¹ "Our mindset has to change – not about the importance of school – but about the value of learning that happens outside of school. Eighty percent of learning happens informally in families and in communities!"² As experienced and highly esteemed providers of informal education, educational institutions such as libraries and museums have a tremendous opportunity to shape learning outcomes for children and youth in informal education settings--both directly through programming and services (practice) and by convening community stakeholders to engage in dialogue and collaboratively envision and adopt a shared framework of intended outcomes (theory). Without a roadmap that outlines the vision for what youth should gain as a result of engaging in informal learning and some direction as to how to measure, track, and achieve those gains, efforts to support youth in informal education settings may not fully leverage the power of this time of opportunity. Investing in a shared framework for youth outcomes in informal education settings could help equip and empower communities to maximize the impact of the learning experiences offered to youth outside of the school day. Momentum for this project is anchored in part by a 2017 evaluation study conducted by Peabody College. Based on interviews and focus groups with over 100 community members, the researchers recommended that NAZA consider evaluating youth-level learning outcomes, an effort that would undoubtedly add value for community youth, their families, organizations, and the school district. The report also indicated that NAZA should consider working from its strengths and focus more on outcomes associated with social and emotional learning and life skill development. The objective of this project is to improve youth-serving professionals' readiness to design informal learning experiences that support youth in developing skills that they need to thrive, through the development of a youth-level outcomes framework for informal education settings, associated measurement and tracking tools, professional development, and other support services. In year 1, NAZA will convene a workgroup that represents diverse community stakeholders to inform a needs assessment focused on what skills local youth need in order to thrive in life and what local community assets currently support youth in developing these needed skills (conducted by Peabody College). The year 1 goal is for the workgroup to utilize the needs assessment findings to adopt shared youth-level outcomes for informal education settings. In year 1, 75% (or 38) of approximately 50 workgroup or focus group participants will report that they agree or strongly agree with the statements associated with IMLS' performance goal to "strengthen museums and libraries as essential partners in addressing the needs of their communities" after participating in the workgroup or a focus group. In year 2, NAZA

will collaborate with Boston After School and Beyond, Peabody College, and other interested stakeholders to develop and adopt a youth-level outcomes framework that details associated measurement and tracking tools, professional development, and support services. NAZA will also pilot professional development focused on the youth outcomes framework for informal education settings. In year 2, 75% (or 75) of 100 youth-serving professionals will report that they agree or strongly agree with the statements associated with IMLS' performance goal to "support communities of practice" as a result of participating in the piloted version of the youth outcomes framework professional development session. Success on these outcomes will be measured via surveys.
