

WHEREAS, organizations such as Parents and Friends of Lesbians and Gays (PFLAG) report that advocates have tracked at least 43 transgender or gender-nonconforming people who have died by violent means so far in 2021, and we would be remiss not to mention the many members of this community whom we have lost due to complications from COVID-19 in an environment in which transgender and gender-nonconforming people often face significant disparities in access to healthcare services, and

WHEREAS, at least 74% of known victims of anti-transgender violence in 2017-2018 were misgendered in initial police or media reports surrounding their deaths; and

WHEREAS, the majority of lives taken through violence were those of Black and Latina transgender women, and

WHEREAS, despite the challenges faced by the transgender community, by observing Transgender Day of Remembrance we recognize and celebrate the growing awareness and acceptance of transgender people in Nashville and across the nation as marked by transgender people serving communities in various public capacities and being elected in increasing numbers to increasingly high public office in state legislatures and municipal bodies throughout the country. Local organizations committed to efforts to raise awareness of and equality for transgender and gender nonconforming people include the Tennessee Transgender Political Coalition, the Tennessee Vals, and the Metro Human Relations Commission; and

WHEREAS, on Transgender Day of Remembrance we honor and commemorate the strength, commitment, and remarkable efforts of those working to secure full and equal civil and human rights for all people, regardless of gender identity or expression.
